HOPPY'S GUN EXPLODES A BAFFLING MYSTERY!

"BAR 20" A REAL WESTERN THRILLER

(Prepared Review)

Another Hopalong Cassidy western thriller, "Bar-20," galloped into town last night at the ..... Theatre through Masterpiece release. Once again hard-fighting, hard-riding Bill Boyd plays the famous cowboy sleuth who always gets his man.

In this story Hoppy and his two pals, California and Lin Bradley (played by Andy Clyde and George Reeves), befriend Marie Stevens (Dustine Farnum) an aristocratic but impoverished ranch girl whose coming marriage to proud Richard Adams (Bob Mitchum) has to be postponed when the jewels he had planned to sell in order to kep his ranch going were stolen by a desperate gang of outlaws during a stagecoach robbery.

Through a misunderstanding, Richard suspects Hoppy and his pals of the robbery, but Hoppy pays no attention and goes right along with his rounding up of the crooks. He makes sure, through a series of clever investigations, that Mark Jackson (Victor Jory), a supposed friend of both Marie and Richard, is the brains behind the gang, and then proceeds to round up him and his henchmen, in a succession of hair-raising scenes that will have you holding tight to your seats.

Don't miss "Bar-20," if you like westerns. This one has everything.

LUCKY STAR

Dustine Farnum, the lovely little starlet who plays the feminine lead in "Bar-20," the exciting "Hopalong" Cassidy western produced by Harry Sherman, and starring William Boyd, is the daughter and the niece, in turn, of two famous actors of the screen's silent days.

Her father, Dustin Farnum, who died in 1929, has the unique reputation of having starred in Harry Sherman's first western film in 1916. Whereas her uncle, William Farnum, starred in that unforgettable first production of "The Spoilers," in which his terrific hand-to-hand battle with Thomas Santschi made screen history.

Miss Farnum studied in the East and holds ribbon awards for her excellence in horsemanship.
